

Leah Maier

October 30, 2019

A woman of tomorrow is a person who needs to be strong, independent, and be able to overcome obstacles gracefully. Women since the beginning of time have been objectified and judged for the way that we handle situations. If we are too emotional in the situations that we go through then we will be criticized for the way that we deal with them. We have overcome so many challenges throughout the years to be able to even come close to the standards that of which men are held. Women have obtained many rights through protests and speaking out about the way in which people of society should be treated.

Women used to have minimal rights. We could not vote, own land, participate in any political positions, or even have an opinion in anything related. The women before me have paved the way and overcome obstacles that have led me to be able to have all the rights I have today. Women of the past have allowed women of today to have advantages that allow us to be closer to the equality of everyone. Women of tomorrow are going to have to show that we are capable of doing anything a man is capable of doing. We need to be determined and pursue anything of which we yearn, such as professions that are likely seen as jobs for men. We need to fight for equal pay and equal rights. If we are qualified enough to obtain the same job as a man then we should be able to be compensated the same. Women have come so far but we still have a long way to go.

“I Leah Maier affirm that this essay was written by me and represents my own original work.”